Why does this matter for Ukraine's economy?

Access to credit allows Ukrainian companies to keep operating, pay wages and invest while the war continues. Serhiy Chernenko, Chairman of the Board of First Ukrainian International Bank, said: "The first half of 2026 has again confirmed the resilience of the Ukrainian economy and the high adaptability of Ukrainian business. Despite all the challenges of wartime, we continue to support our clients, lend actively to the economy, invest in digital services and create new opportunities for entrepreneurs. Support for Ukrainian business remains one of our main priorities, because today this is an investment in the recovery and the future of the country."

What has FUIB done in digital banking?

In the first half of 2026, FUIB became the first bank in Ukraine to receive authorisation from the National Bank of Ukraine in the field of Open Banking. The bank continues to invest in financial services, digital technology and customer experience, and received several professional awards during the period for marketing communications, sustainable development and corporate social responsibility.

How does FUIB support the country and society?

Since the start of the full-scale invasion, FUIB has paid UAH 22.8 billion ($508 million) in taxes to the state budget and its social investment has passed UAH 1.4 billion ($31 million). The bank's 2025 social report, published earlier this year, set out spending of more than UAH 495 million ($11 million) in that year alone on support for the Security and Defence Forces, blood donation, accessible branches and services, employee assistance and education.
